What's your timezone nowadays? I am in India for a bit, but pretty flexible with times.

I can Today, Tomorrow, and Thursday feel free to suggest a time. Friday and Saturday would be harder, but doable.

Hey,

Don't know what happened my wifi gave up on me suddenly. Loved our chat today, please share the memo you have and we can continue over email and schedule a call in some time!

Happy Journey, have a great weekend!

Best,
Vaibhav

Hey, no worries, I thought you just didn't find our conversation that engaging hahaha.

Could you share the memo you mentioned so I can read up a bit before we talk again?

Best,

Memo will help answer that :)

Validating more than anything - step in the right direction. What I'm thinking of is a fundamentally different product as its oriented around the actual connective tissue of how navigation in the healthcare system works. I don't think the specific challenge today is the ability to do really good triage with models, it's converting that triage into some actionable way to get healthy. That includes navigating to the right doctor in the context of your insurance, something that proactively sends you reminders, does actions for you such as scheduling/med tracking/etc. And what they've released on the consumer side is good at pulling consumers to more async/chat-based health management and on the enterprise side is something that likely needs to be used to build on top of to build a really good navigation system.

Glad we spent the time together - pretty excited about the brainstorming that we did and I think it'd be great to continue to jam and see what it would be like to work together. Here's my thinking:

1. Based on the new architecture diagram you've shared, why don't you create a short spec for V1? I think a great way for me to get a better sense of how you think about setting up the basic infrastructure (for the full stack), data you want to pull in, what features to prioritize, etc. Basically a written a more detailed version of the architecture diagram. And I can add on to this and we can split up different parts of it to work on / hopefully use my existing repo as a foundation.
2. I think using the V1 spec, we can independently spend some time thinking about what an ideal GTM / acquisition strategy can look like and compare notes - good way for us to brainstorm together and push each other's assumptions on what could / couldn't work + understand how we're approaching the space.
3. Let's find time on Friday or next weekend to sync up live? What's the best coworking platform for you? Slack, email, text, etc? LMK and we can mainly move our convo there.

Excited to dig in together - lmk how this sounds!
